What these numbers are, and what they are not

We would rather give you four figures we can stand behind than a dashboard of percentages you cannot check. Two of them are close in size and mean quite different things, so, plainly:

Over £6 million is finished work. More than forty projects, delivered over the years across three different roles: main contractor, project manager and developer. It is the track record.

£6 to £7 million is happening now. The combined development value of live projects Craig is involved in today, in Manchester and Carlisle, working remotely. It is the proof the remote model works at scale, which is the fair question everyone asks.

They are separate figures and we do not add them together. Craig has also acted as project manager to a contractor on a multi-million pound London project for a national institution, which is a third engagement again, and one we are not at liberty to name.

The Manchester and Carlisle projects are the ones worth asking about. They are the answer to the fair question every client asks, which is how anyone can run your site properly from a distance. We are doing it now, at that value, and you are welcome to ask how.
